Learning Photoshop also requires time and effort. If you're not interested in learning the program and find yourself looking for the fastest way to make good-quality edits, you might want to consider using other programs such as Paint Shop Pro or Corel Paint Shop Pro (discussed later in this chapter). The following chapters contain detailed Photoshop tutorials and walk-throughs to help you master Photoshop as a professional. Understanding What Photoshop Is and What It Is Not To get started with Photoshop, you have to understand its fundamentals. The program's elements (files, layers, groups, and paths) are similar to the basic building blocks of animation. Files are storage structures that the program manages to work with. A file is a collection of raster data, which includes the actual pixel image. The photoshop file is the container of all the layers and other components that make up the Photoshop project. Layers are the building blocks of an image's file. Layers can contain colors, lines, curves, and shapes and can be made transparent or solid. Groups are containers for objects and selections that can be made to become their own layers. Paths are used to create lines or lines, shapes, or shapes. They're the equivalent of the tools you use when designing images. You can apply special effects to paths and edit the paths individually. As you begin to use these elements, Photoshop's features become easier to understand. In the following sections, I discuss the individual components and explain what they mean to Photoshop. Understanding Photoshop files Photoshop files are containers for images or components to make images. A Photoshop file consists of one or more layers, paths, masks, and other characteristics. The following sections detail each of these elements and what they can do. Layers The fundamental elements of a Photoshop file are layers, which are basically containers or bins for objects, selections, colors, and other items. Layers (Figure 8-1) are the main construction unit of the Photoshop file. Each layer can contain raster or vector objects, blend modes, layer masks, layer styles, and other items. You can work with layers separately or as a group. You can also duplicate, move, and resize them. Figure 8-1: Layers are the building blocks of Photoshop. You can paint and add elements to them to create the look of your project. You can organize a Photoshop file into a particular hierarchical

[The impact of upper gastrointestinal endoscopy in the diagnosis and treatment of gastrointestinal complaints]. Upper gastrointestinal endoscopy (UGE) is widely used in the diagnosis and therapy of a variety of gastrointestinal diseases. Serious complications are rare and occur rarely. The question of cost and cost-effectiveness of UGE must be answered decisively. This study examined the frequency, site and cause of complications of UGE in a large group of patients seen at the outpatient clinic of a general hospital. All perioperative complications associated with UGE were collected prospectively in a database for the period 1.1. 2000 to 30.11. 2001. Complications were defined as acute problems developing during the endoscopy and continuing to the next day. A total of 17,114 UGE were performed, including 112 (0.67%) complications. Acute bleeding was seen in 1.9%, post-endoscopy bleeding in 0.19%, post-endoscopy perforation in 0.03%, and other perioperative complications in 0.51%. Death occurred in 0.19% of the procedures due to the cardiovascular, pulmonary, infectious or traumatic complications. Significant cost-savings have been documented.Q: Javascript - Getting json data after completion I am using jquery on my page to ask a server for data and process it. The problem is I am not getting the json in a function call. The function call is executed asynchronously, I tried using setTimeout to make sure its done but when I use alert inside the setTimeout the alert is shown immediately without waiting for the function call. Here is my code : `function getData(){ $.ajax({ url : "serverurl", data : { 'userInput' : userInput, 'phpInput' : phpInput }, dataType : "json" }).done(function( data ){ alert(data);`
