Here are 11 Photoshop Elements features you may not know about. 1. Fix Exposure You can use Exposure Control points in Photoshop Elements to correct bad exposure, whether that bad exposure comes from a bad photo or a bad photo editing program. But before you can correct, you have to get the Exposure Control points, which are the small, colorful circles in the lower left corner of the editor. To get the Exposure Control points, select the image in the program, right-click the image in the program window, and select Image > Adjustments > Exposure. 2. Add or Subtract a Border To add a black border around your image, select Image > Image Boundaries > Add a Border. 3. Add a Gradient To add a gradient, select Image > Image Boundaries > Add Gradient. 4. Add a Drop Shadow To add a drop shadow, select Image > Image Boundaries > Add Drop Shadow. 5. Remove a Border To remove a border, select Image > Image Boundaries > Remove a Border. 6. Sharpen an Image You can increase the sharpness of an image by selecting Image > Image Boundaries > Sharpen. 7. Blur an Image You can blur an image by selecting Image > Image Boundaries > Blur. 8. Create a Stretched Photo You can stretch a photo to create images that are larger than their original size, like banner images. To do this, select Image > Image Boundaries > Stretch to Fit. 9. Create a Polaroid Effect You can transform images by using the Polaroid Effects. To create a Polaroid photo, select Image > Polaroid Effects > Add Polaroid. 10. Rotate a Photo You can rotate images by using the Rotate toolbar. 11. Flip an Image Horizontally You can flip a photo horizontally by selecting Image > Flip > Horizontal. Installing or Upgrading Photoshop Elements Using the old version You can use the Photoshop Elements program by selecting it from the list in the Start menu. You can also download the program from the link above. After the download, click the link to start installing the program. 1. When installing, select the Use an existing program 2. Obama to lay out tax plan WASHINGTON ¶ Facing weeks of criticism that he's not keeping his promise to deliver a tax cut, President Barack Obama is set to lay out his vision for taxes in coming days, drawing on the ideas of two outside tax reform analysts. Obama's plan will also include a proposal to give taxpayers more time to adjust to the recently passed health care law, say aides. The details are not yet known. But Obama's new team is already casting the first tax proposal, which is expected to draw a sharp contrast to the plan written in July by the independent Tax Policy Center. That plan emphasized tax cuts and called for an overhaul of the nation's complex tax code. It took into account Republican concerns about the budget deficit. And it called for a modest increase in tax revenues to pay for the cuts. Aides say the president's team wants a tax plan that is simple and efficient. They also aim to take into account the advice of dozens of outside economists. Republican leaders, meanwhile, have acknowledged that the president's plan will be less aggressive, but they say it still won't raise the $4 trillion in additional revenues required to offset the costs of his costly health care initiative. Both Obama and his critics have good reason to believe the new plan will be a compromise. The president is not interested in a tax fight with Congress. And Republicans say they agree with Obama's emphasis on making sure wealthy taxpayers don't get a free ride. The president will lay out his plan in coming weeks. He's expected to hold a news conference late this month. Antonio Guterres sent his resignation letter to UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon at the start of the month. Credit:UN In his letter to Ban, Guterres argued that he did not need to "reinvent the wheel" and that his staff and advisors have already been working to this end. "I'm not going to reinvent the wheel, I'm not going to reinvent you, and neither am I going to reinvent the United Nations," he wrote. "What I'm going to do is build on what you have been doing, what you have been doing well and what you have been doing not so well. "I'm going to build on what you have already achieved, on what we have already started." In one respect, his resignation has meant Ban will now get a new chief to steer the 5a). In our case the CSF spaces are filled with eosinophils, which were seen as granulation tissue-like masses. Contiguous involvement of the temporal bones had occurred due to the elevated intracranial pressure in both the cases. Both the patients complained of seizures, speech loss, and diplopia. The behavioral abnormalities like an exaggerated emotional response and poor attention associated with the presence of visual hallucinations were noticed in our patients. The results of a detailed neurological examination, neurocognitive studies, and brain imaging (MRI/CT) of both the patients were within normal limits. The possible mechanisms causing the formation of the pseudotumor cerebri are: (a) the C1 inhibitor deficiency syndrome, (b) anterior pituitary dysfunction, (c) the lack of CSF secretion, and (d) the obstruction of CSF pathways. The C1 inhibitor deficiency syndrome is considered to be the most important cause of pseudotumor cerebri due to its rarity and the fact that it is usually diagnosed in the middle age. The deficiency of C1 inhibitor results in an excessive activation of the contact system leading to increased production of bradykinin which leads to increased vascular permeability and increased tissue edema. In the first case, this could be the direct effect of VHL gene mutation. However, in the second case it could have been caused due to a reversal of the normal anatomic relationships between the orbit and the brain; however, it could be the result of a hormonal abnormality of unknown cause. Conclusion {#sec1-4} ===== Pseudotumor cerebri is a benign condition whose characteristic feature is headache, papilledema, and severe headaches that are not relieved by the ordinary use of the Valsalva maneuver (taking deep breaths) and whose optic disc is swollen. It is a disease of young females and the ratio of males to females is approximately 1:1, and it is not found at any level of education. It is a disease that has a devastating psychological impact, with a high impact on the quality of life of the patient and her family, and thus these cases should be assessed with the consideration of the possible psychological impact of the disease. The etiology is still not known, although a genetic theory has gained popularity recently. Our case series highlights the importance of eye movements as a manifestation of the disease, and these findings should be associated with the central nervous system
