Microbial contamination can be a significant problem in semiconductor manufacturing operations. Microbial contamination of manufacturing processes can cause significant yield loss, damage to equipment and facilities and pose a significant health risk for workers operating on the manufacturing processes. Semiconductor manufacturing processes are often performed on wafers of a semiconductor substrate (or simply xe2x80x9csubstratexe2x80x9d). Exposing the wafers to microbes can result in significant yield loss. The cause of such yield loss is not well understood, but is believed to be in part due to the sheer volume of exposure. Many wafers are handled in wafer cassettes to hold wafers during processing and, accordingly, many wafers are within the same cassettes during processing. Some wafer processing systems include a common chamber or xe2x80x9cwafer cassettexe2x80x9d which receives wafers from wafer cassettes, processes the wafers and returns the wafers to the wafer cassettes. Unfortunately, this common chamber is used for processing many wafers which can lead to the creation of a large number of conditions or media within the common chamber and chamber access. Common conditions or media are typically created by the work pieces contacting the processing media, the work pieces 6a5afdab4c

But the details of the agreement, and of the new structure for peace, suggest this may be more trouble than it is worth. It is tempting to believe that a gentleman's agreement, negotiated between two countries that have nuclear weapons, can actually deliver on its promises.
