The recently proposed Integrated Formulation of the World Health Organization in the treatment of thyroid neoplasms included the following diagnosis: well-differentiated, papillary carcinoma; follicular variant, papillary carcinoma; tall cell variant, follicular carcinoma; columnar cell variant, follicular carcinoma; and poorly differentiated (anaplastic) carcinoma. Furthermore, these were divided into those with an invasive element and those without. This classification was intended to help distinguish those cases in which no surgical intervention might be appropriate and those for which microsurgical procedures might be indicated. Of 7,646 thyroid carcinomas, 64% (n = 4766) represented well-differentiated papillary carcinoma, 12% (n = 888) represented the follicular variant of papillary carcinoma, 8% (n = 604) represented the tall cell variant of papillary carcinoma, 3% (n = 224) represented the columnar cell variant of follicular carcinoma, and 4% (n = 300) represented the poorly differentiated carcinoma. All of the follicular neoplasms studied (63 cases) met the working formulation of the World Health Organization (which specified that the follicular variant of papillary carcinoma should be graded as a follicular neoplasm and included an invasive element), and 47 cases (73%) of the follicular neoplasms represented carcinoma without an invasive element. Because of these criteria, we propose a modification of the Working Formulation of thyroid neoplasms to include follicular neoplasms that do not meet the criteria for the working formulation.3D reconstruction of the rib cage by phase-encoded stimulated-echo adiabatic inversion recovery with applied magnetic field gradient field. A novel method for 3D reconstruction of the rib cage from low-resolution (0.5 x 0.5 x 1.0 mm)
