The problem with the report is that it didn't distinguish between incidents that only happened to the public versus incidents that only happened to specific individuals. These numbers are mostly false. At this point I'm only going to be focusing on online incidents, which I'll define as any incident where you have been the target of a deliberate attack on some form of online media, whether that's a website, an email, a forum, a comment, or whatever. This is only going to be about incidents that happened within the last 24 hours.

Disclaimer: Many people have posted that I'm trying to take away their freedom of speech. This is not so. I'm just focusing on incidents where someone intentionally picked on a person that happened to be Jewish, or where a person was singled out for being a Zionist or Jew. The goal of this project is for it to set out a list of online incidences that are based on actual events. While there may be references to others with similar stories, the only connection these other incidents have to the report is that they happened within the last 24 hours and are about "Jews" (or "Zionist" in the case of Israel). I'm going to do this by having an Excel sheet track incidents of anti-Semitism and incidents of anti-Zionism. If you can think of a way to add incidents to either of these categories, please let me know. When an event occurs, I'm going to give it a tag, such as Anti-Semite, Anti-Zionist, Zionist, Anti-Zionist, Anti-Israel, Pro-Israel, etc. The spreadsheet will then go into a database and
