Apropos of 3 cases]. Several papers have confirmed the coexistence of pulmonary neoplasia with pulmonary fibrosis, but bronchoalveolar-interstitial lesions have been considered as a secondary form of pulmonary neoplasia, originating from the bronchial tree. Histological investigations of the three cases we report here evidenced that the bronchoalveolar-interstitial lesions we had observed in the past were rather a consequence of an inflammatory bronchiolitis, secondary to pulmonary neoplasia or to bronchitis. This bronchiolitis was responsible for the destruction of the bronchiolar surface and of the adjacent alveolar and interstitial tissue. The surgical resection of the bronchial lesion which was associated with a systematic examination of the bronchial tree, had allowed to diagnose two cases of small cell carcinoma and one of large cell carcinoma.1.
