To evaluate the usefulness of baseline polysomnographic recordings in subjects with subclinical sleep apnea syndrome. Prospective study. University hospital. A group of 24 consecutive patients referred to a sleep laboratory because of subclinical sleep apnea syndrome. All subjects had a complete overnight polysomnographic recording without an adequate overnight sleep. The results showed a higher apnea/hypopnea index (AHI) and a lower minimum oxygen saturation in comparison with an age-matched population. The comparison of the initial and final night AHI was 4.7 +/- 3.5 vs 3.5 +/- 2.8, respectively. The AHI in this group of patients was > or = 5 only in five patients. The AHI was not correlated with age, sex, body mass index, and neck circumference. Patients with a baseline sleep study of three hours or less were compared with patients who had baseline sleep study of more than three hours. The minimum oxygen saturation and the AHI were similar in both groups. There were no cases of worsening of sleep-disordered breathing in patients with a baseline sleep study of less than three hours. Baseline sleep study allows to make a better diagnostic work up in patients with subclinical sleep apnea syndrome. We conclude that patients with a baseline study of three hours or less should not be considered as having a sleep-disordered breathing.Q: Displaying a user's single calendar event in a WPF page I am trying to display a single event on a calendar in a WPF application but I am having trouble getting the date to display correctly.
