Q: What is the purpose of virtual inheritance in c++ i'm just wondering, If i have a class B and A extends B, and A doesn't derive from B, then the object of type A will be an exact-scaled copy of one of the objects of type B, right? So if i change any of the values of A and B will change the same value in A and B, but why do i need Virtual Inheritance? A: Virtual inheritance allows you to have two classes that look very similar (same public interface, same methods and properties, etc.). For example, let's say that you have class Animal and class Mammal. An Animal can be a Mammal, but a Mammal can also be a Mure. If you don't use virtual inheritance, you could create two objects, let's say a Dog and a Cat, which have identical methods and properties but are not derived from the same base class. However, using virtual inheritance allows you to create Dog and Cat which are both Animals, and which both implement the same methods (some methods being overridden in the Mammal subclass). In summary, even though Mammal might be derived directly from Animal, the methods and properties are not actually defined in Animal. A: If i have a class B and A extends B, and A doesn't derive from B, then the object of type A will be an exact-scaled copy of
