Is there a way to make it always copy files named .zipbfcdm to the destination without the other stuff? A: The first condition specifies the action to be taken when the first file is encountered. The second condition specifies the action to take when the pattern is encountered in the filename. Hence, you can use `(?([^\']+)).zipbfcdm` as the regular expression. Q: How to configure annotations by file in Eclipse? How to configure annotations by file in Eclipse so that annotations could be available only on specified classes (Like we can do with annotations)? Thank you for your time in advance. A: In Eclipse goto Preferences > Java > Annotations > Compiler > Annotation Processing: And then add Pattern you want. E.g.: Pattern . Result Q: Using a cell to retrieve data in a table to be used in another cell I am using a Windows Phone 7 application. I have a table, with one column containing an image. A cell must show, depending on the image, either a red dot or a green dot.

How do I do that? I tried to link the image to the image cell with the `Button.ImageSource` property, with a binding like this one: `Binding myImage = new Binding() {Source = myImage, Converter = Converters.ImageSource};` But obviously it is not working because the Binding does not allow me to access a named object. The image object has only the `DisplayName` as a string property, there is no name. Is there any way to get the image into the cell in such a way that the binding will work? A: One way you can accomplish this would be with a converter as you mention. If the Image is a property of the item being bound then you don't have to bind the image source to a cell as per your question. A converter could look something like this: `public class ImageItemConverter : IValueConverter { public object Convert(object value, Type targetType, object parameter, System.Globalization.CultureInfo culture) { if (value == null) return null;`

Editor Correction - Wanted to add this so that Apple member (with a lot of down votes) can see. It's possible a lot of times, when someone starts a thread like this, the first thing is to find a software to fix their Mac. I'm not saying they deserve down votes. As we've all heard this many times, people fix their Mac at home using a Windows or Linux machine. When the Mac starts crashing, person may be like, "Hmmm, maybe this is the program causing the problem." If that's the case, then sometimes it's possible the down votes are because the poster was looking for free-to-download programs and their Mac is not that way. It's good for us to help our fellow Apple members as we all can't be a Mac expert. I've learned a lot from posting information and people learning from it. So, in this case, I am replying in the hopes it helps this person have a better day in the future. "Thanks" A: You can use a new thread for it, but keep in mind this is the rule from the Help Center: Don't Ask: Questions asking d0c515b9f4

I think it makes the matter more difficult for you to do it manually.fuf you download a program that has nothing to do with WinISO, it will automatically unpack it.If the program is a file converter, it can use the ISO image files you already have to go to this site automatically for you.If the program is a disk to ISO converter, it can convert a physical disk to an ISO image file.I think it makes the matter more difficult for you to do it manually.It is unnecessary for you to get a program like WinISO. I tested the DVD ISO file from on my PC and it correctly read and played the DVD.
