Basically I have a page (that will be uploaded to our server) with multiple input fields and one should only be able to enter values when the previous values have been entered into the previous input fields. I have tried making this happen multiple times on keyup and other events, but it doesn't seem to work. I have also tried using keypress instead of keyup as I'm unsure why that's not working. All other input fields aren't doing anything though, just not sure why this one isn't.. I have tried the same code in Chrome and FireFox and both work. HTML JavaScript function check() { var x = document.getElementById('start_time').value; var y = document.getElementById('end_time').value; if (x == y) { alert('Success!'); } } It should display 'Success!', but it is not. I know my code is not the best, but I have tried multiple things and none of them work. Also this is my first post on here. Thanks in advance! A: On keyup every time it fires, it runs the function check. You don't want this. You want a single event, fired once at the end of the user's input. So you should save the values to the input fields on keyup, and get them when the form is ready (e.g. keyup is fired) to check if everything was entered correctly. Also, you have two elements with
