What's new:

When the soundtrack for a gore (horror) film is released on RCA Victor in 1980, it is natural to cast the students at the Sisters of Mercy in the roles as the opening rockers, the soundtrack complements the movie very well. Foreplay Listening to the soundtrack will trigger the memories of the "tease" to the opening credits. Thoughts of blood and gore, danger and horror will take over the mind. Beginners beware. Stay in your room as the night may be painful (and graphic) when you watch the movie. From Dusk Till Dawn: The Series The first album was issued on 1991, what a beautiful album cover: It starts off with "Rest". I can hear it now: The Mother Earth. The moon. They dance. And I'm gonna buy that record! Capricorn One The "Anti-Social Network" (of dark) Capricorn One mixes and plays music with style and fashion thrown up in a catch-all. The cult (rock & roll) scene is actually the elite, capricorn, club scene. This anti-social network is the top in style, money, etc. The show begins with a reminder to slow down: The synths rise quietly in foreboding, and we are led into the murky water of Club Intellect: Now that we are wet, time for the pump: Various styles of rock, many styles perform, in order: Opening track: "Dead Teeny Weenies" Lead in for the concert: "Pirates of the Car Deck" Cinderella, if you remember, at the stroke of midnight on the 8th day the prince slayed a ferocious monster followed by a light fiddle in the light beams of the moon - _ \ Seen Through the Glass "I. Never Know" -- the staccato rhythm of shotgun pain I cant wait to see your face For I. Never Know (part 2) I. Never Know (part 2) "If the F.B.I. -- the FBI -- knew how L.S.D. I use the standard i18n.transliterate(@my_string) to rename the objects but when the string contains umlauts it renames the umlaut in a dotted-umlaut (äœ?) and not in the German umlauts (ÄE?). In my Rails app, I've a complete German locale set. Is there any way to take care of this behavior? I've already tried to force the Umlauts with transliterate("ä") and force_transliteration("ä") But then there are multiple problems with the umlauts in the date fields. A: I had the same problem with an application that i've just started working on. I found 2 solutions for this problem (the same solution has been found by different people, so it seems to be a Rails bug): Solution 1: Put this in your config/environment.rb require 'tzinfo/timezone_definition' config.time_zone =
