This week at 2nd and Oak we will be featuring two highlights of our read-aloud series, celebrating two important B.C. literary figures. Published in 1994, Is Her Blonde Heavy? is a collection of short stories by Joseph Boyden. In the title story, a young man returns to the small town of Melancthon, New Brunswick, where he was raised and where a lot of family history has transpired, to meet with his uncle. The uncle's wife, the narrator's great aunt, has been missing for some time and is now presumed dead. This story explores the meanings of family, love and loss, and questions the boundaries between the personal and the collective memory. Pulitzer Prize-winning author Mordecai Richler is best known for his satirical work, The Incomparable Lightness of Being, and The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz. In this short story, Richler engages in a dialogue with his Jewish identity and Jewish humour. Duddy attempts to explain his perception of himself through some odd incidents involving the development of a chicken-finger sandwich. The scene is set in a New York City deli, and ultimately makes reference to the Holocaust. These two works show both the extraordinary talent of Joe Boyden, as well as the power of a dark humour and the ethics of family honour.Blowing the Whistle on Dimon's Bluff December 24, 2013 By

Peter R. Orszag As we embark on another new year, it's a good time to look back on the year that was and celebrate what's likely to be another highly successful year for the United States. (The last one, I believe, was the most successful one since the Great Depression.) We've already had two really good years, 2009 and 2010, but there's evidence of a third coming in 2013. With just under a year to go in 2013, there are a lot of reasons to think that this year will be a good one. The economy, which hasn't really recovered since the Great Recession ended in June 2009, is by many measures looking much better than it did at that time. The unemployment rate is at its lowest level in nearly five years, and wage growth is accelerating. The stock market has had a really great year. The Dow Jones Industrial Average has risen by 33 percent since the market bottom in March 2009, and
