DIY - Behind the Dojo Episode 2 Preview - WWE SmackDown Live 2014-10-22 by DVDDoc. Guttman has a video conference with Commissioner Braddock and Braddock is furious because his department lost 60 percent of their budget. Fetal growth retardation: definition, diagnosis, and management. Fetal growth restriction is a syndrome of decreased fetal growth, or birth weight below the 10th percentile for gestational age. Fetal growth restriction is a diagnosis of exclusion in which other possible causes of intrauterine growth failure are first considered, such as uterine anomalies, infections, vascular anomalies, diabetes, and certain chromosomal anomalies. Fetal growth restriction occurs most often as secondary to placental insufficiency, which is associated with placental failure to transfer oxygen and nutrients to the fetus in a time-efficient manner.

Q: How to wrap a custom class in Objective-C using Interface Builder? I'm using the Core Data framework to store some data in the background. In this, I've created my custom NSManagedObject class. In the applications' view, I have a button and in the selector that is called when the button is pressed I want to create an instance of my NSManagedObject class. I can hard code this in the selector, but this would be difficult to maintain. How can I do this using Interface Builder?

```
@interface Object : NSManagedObject
@property NSInteger attribute1;
@property NSInteger attribute2;
@end
Object.h
@interface Object ()
@end
Object.m
@implementation Object
@dynamic attribute1;
@dynamic attribute2;
@end
```

A: This is generally more of a configuration issue, but you could create a subclass of NSObject for your view controller and in IB, you can choose "Class" from the pop up menu for the object that represents your "custom class" (Object in this case), and choose "Subclass of: NSObject". Then, just edit the subclass object to be a subclass of Object. It'll look a little like this:

```
@interface Object : NSObject
@property (nonatomic, readonly) NSInteger attribute1;
@property (nonatomic, readonly) NSInteger attribute2;
@end
Object.h
@interface Object ()
```
