Photoshop CS6 is an excellent program for photo editing. It's a reliable and powerful tool for photo retouching, and it has some impressive new features. Before you invest in it, however, consider your budget and the price of CS6, which starts at $699. Photoshop doesn't come cheap, but many photographers and graphic artists swear by the software and would highly recommend it to others. Photomatix Photomatix is a little-known software package that manipulates photographs in some ways like Photoshop. Although technically a program for manipulating digital images, it can be used to retouch photos created on film as well. It allows you to lighten, darken, and sharpen photos, change the contrast, adjust colors, and make artistic effects on top of the photo. Some people say that it's the least difficult editing program because it's designed to work simply. However, the settings are very unique and can be a little hard to understand at first, which is why it's not as well known as Photoshop. The flip side of this is that Photomatix is also pretty much a snap to use. Because it's the least known and most basic of the photo programs, Photomatix tends to be more affordable than Photoshop. It's also the easiest to use, so you can often tweak the finished work to your heart's content with no problem. One downside to it is that you have to be able to understand the menus to change the settings and adjust things. Most beginners end up trying to adjust things until they figure it out, which means you're spending a little time figuring out what each setting does. Other programs like Photoshop, GIMP is also an excellent software program that handles large digital images as well as single photos. It can also be used for painting and for retouching. Paint Shop Pro Paint Shop Pro is an illustration program that you can use to create and alter artwork. It's not for photo editing or retouching, but it can be used for drawing and painting. This program also creates more complex work that could be a great image retouching tool for professionals. Some artists and designers use Paint Shop Pro to create their own works or vector graphics and then use GIMP or Photoshop to complete the final bit of work. Paint Shop Pro is more expensive than Photoshop, but it does have a very capable editing system that's worth investing in

Before we continue, please keep in mind that even though Photoshop Elements does support layers, you can't use layers to create an image with more than one resolution. From scratch, Photoshop Elements will have its own interface. An autofill panel can be accessed in the bottom of the screen by holding down the Shift key. If you open an image, Photoshop Elements opens the image in a new canvas window. Some tools in Photoshop Elements are greyed out. Press the Toolbox in the lower right corner to bring up the tool palette where you can access the tools. To bring up the tool palette, press and hold the Shift key or press Alt + F1. You can drag-and-drop text from the text tool window into another area of the document window. Drag the text tool up to the upper-left corner of the text tool window. A black border will appear around the text. If you drag the text tool out of the canvas window, the text will remain within the original document window. Use the Select tool to select an image with a border. Right-click on any of the four sides of the image, and press Duplicate. The image will copy itself a second time and be surrounded by a black border. You can then move the image around. With the White Balance tool, you can adjust the color of an image. If you select any of the four sides of the image, and press the H key, you will see three small square rulers. These rulers allow you to move the image up or down. Hold the spacebar to lock the movement. Hold the Ctrl key and press the S key to open the Select Sample Colors tool window. Hold the Ctrl key and use the left mouse button to select the color swatches that you wish to apply to the image. Hold the Ctrl key and press the H key to open the Image menu. Select one of the following tools: Levels, Curves, Hue/Saturation, Channel Mixer or Black & White. Hold the Ctrl key and press the S key to open the Select Sample Colors tool window. Hold the Ctrl key and use the left mouse button to select the color swatches that you wish to apply to the image. Hold the Ctrl key and press the H key to open the Image menu. Select one of the following tools: Levels, Curves 05a79ccef

Brushes You can create your own brushes and save them for later use, or you can use brushes provided by Photoshop. If you are using a graphics tablet or mouse, you can select a brush from the Brush panel. There are 10 to 13 brushes in the default brushes set, but you can create your own by selecting the brush from the Brushes panel and clicking the Brush tool. Figure A When you select a brush from the Brushes panel, you see its attributes and the cursor changes to a brush shape. You can change the brush size, hardness, color, amount and angle of the stroke. You can also control which area of the image is used to create the stroke. If the stroke includes transparency, you can control the transparency of the stroke, as shown in figure A. The stroke can be changed to a path (steps) object by moving the path handle, as shown in figure B. Figure B Any of the tools, including the Brush tool, Clipboard or Layer tools, can be used to create an effect with a brush. To create a stroke with a color, click the cursor in the image area, as shown in figure C. A color box appears, as shown in figure D. You can change the color of the stroke using the color box, as shown in figure E, or click anywhere in the image to select a color or texture for the stroke. Figure E You can also control the size of the brush tip and the effect of the solid or stroked area. You can adjust the settings for hardness, softness, direction, size, and transparency with the Brush tool settings, as shown in figure F. Figure F To use a brush, click in the image area to open the selection handles, as shown in figure G. Then click and drag the mouse as you would with a pen or stylus. When you release the mouse button, the brush creates a stroke on the image. You can see the effect of the brush stroke on the image and the extra element added to the document, as shown in figure H. Figure H Brushes are also available in the Brush panel in the Effects panel. Here, they can be used for various effects, including painting.

Q: Scraping Data from Website that uses javascript I am trying to scrape some information from a website using the "requests" library in Python. This information is located on pages that use javascript and then it pushes the contents of those pages into the page that contains the javascript. Is there any way to bypass this and still be able to scrape the information? I am able to scrape the information using scrapy and other libraries but I would like to get this from the requirements page of this website. I have written some code that connects to the page and scrapes the data off but I also have to use a javascript library to actually get the data. Since the data is located within a javascript library, is there any way I can still get it if I use something like selenium? A: This looks like a HTTP response with a JS script in a response header. To deal with that, you need to capture the response content. You can do so by: `import requests import re url = "" resp = requests.get(url) js_content = re.search("var st = '(.*?)'", resp.text).group(1) print(js_content) resp.encoding Python 2/3 compatibility note: You can also use a regular expression to capture the javascript variable content without injecting javascript. The content is being loaded from source, so you can capture this as well using requests. You can use resp.text to get the text, it is unicode text. Q: Mapping objects to multiple tables in a many to many relationship in SQL Server For example, we have a PRODUCT object. A product can have many VERSIONS of that product. A VERSION object has one PRODUCT. I would like to create one table, a PRODUCT_VERSION table, that has a PRODUCT_ID, VERSION_ID, PRODUCT_VERSION_ID. Is there a best practice or pattern for doing this? It sounds like I should just have one PRODUCT_`
