I've just started to teach myself ActionScript (basically from scratch) and I've noticed that I found the Vectoring View much more useful than having more callback functions and checking variables every time I call one of the methods of the Vectoring View. I understand that the vectoring view is just that, an automation to the typical flow of views that we create in AS. But that doesn't really make any sense to me, since I'm pretty sure that some alternative methods exist. I feel like the vectoring view is a huge waste of time. A: A pointer to a movie clip or other display object is essentially just a bunch of numbers to help the rendering engine do it's thing. When you use the vectoring view, you tell flash to c6a93da74d
