One of the standout features of the Hardline beta was its attention to detail, so when it came time to bring Shattered City to life, we brought on the custom map design talent of Guerrilla Games - aka the creators of the PS3 version of Killzone 3. As a result, Shattered City combines the two with a special "artifact" that gives you a glimpse of what's to come in the final game. Plus, in addition to a unique art style, Shattered City is the first game to feature a dynamic skylight system where you can shine down on the action from above. [9] for players to know, but one for your game. Then again, Battlefield: Hardline doesn't present itself as a war simulation so what does it matter?
