The Robe 1953 1080p Bluray X264 ((TOP))

burton, who was lured away from his own pioneering full-frame, stereophonic 'gladiator' for the chance to lead his own "robot" in a technicolor epic, plays jesus with earnest conviction, but his character lacks dimension. the redemptive message, for which 'the robe' was nominated for eight academy awards, is relayed with too much sermonizing and not enough relatable action. as a result, burton's performance is stiff and stilted, and neither he nor the film succeeds in selling its spiritual message. by contrast, mature, as jesus' personal disciple and the film's real star, is charismatic and magnetic. though he's at his best in the film's climactic scenes, he never gets to showcase his physical prowess. filmed in cinemascope, mature appears too tall and almost massive. nevertheless, his manner is confident, his charisma draws you in, and his sincerity is palpable. the restoration is an example of digital video technology at its best, and despite having seen 'the robe' on a number of occasions over the years, i never get tired of viewing it. koster has created an absolutely extraordinary image, and the look is so pleasing that it's easy to overlook the film's many flaws. the film's black-and-white palette is faithful to the original, and while the image is not as rich and vibrant as the new blu-ray, it nevertheless rivals the look of cinemascope's original theatrical release. superb color, perfect black levels, and a consistently sharp image make this new version of 'the robe' a must-see. the restoration is wonderful and its video transfer is so impressive that you may overlook the many imperfections in the film's technical aspects.

The Robe 1953 1080p Bluray X264

this really is a new experience for me. i usually stick to more recent releases but this was appealing for a variety of reasons. i'm used to a more studio driven approach in my films, something i'm more familiar with in the theatre. the "look" of "the robe" is vintage. the low budget certainly shows through. the characters are somewhat caricatures but they are likable, and the plot has a lot of intrigue. the themes of the film are not new but they are very human. it's a simple story with big ideas. i'm not sure that "the robe" is the best film i've ever seen but it is very near the top. it's 1634 quebec. laforgue (lothaire bluteau) is a jesuit which the natives call black robe. he and young daniel (aden young) are sent on a dangerous journey by champlain to the distant mission with the hurons. they are guided by a group of algonquin indians led by chomina (august schellenberg). daniel falls for chomina's daughter annuka (sandrine holt). simple things like a clock and writing seems to be magic for the natives and they suspect black robe is a demon. the thrilling sequel to the robe (1953) demetrius and the gladiators (1954) follows the further adventures of the christian slave demetrius (victor mature) sentenced to servitude as a gladiator in the roman arena. there his faith is tested in to-the-death combat and by the wiles of the seductive messalina (susan hayward) all under the obsessive eye of the mad emperor caligula (jay robinson). director
