Altium Designer 18.1.7 Beta

Altium's new and most powerful feature is the ability to snap your components and traces to your settings in any layers. Some components can be snapped to both a rectangular or square grid. The grid configuration panel has several settings that you can use to switch between the different grid options. For instance, you can choose to have the rectangular grid snap the centerline as a baseline, use snap lines for alignment or set a specific snap point in the center of the component. Additionally, you can choose to make the grid snap to an internal or external corner, select an absolute snap point or toggle between an internal and an external layer to apply it. The File - Generate menu option of the File pulldown menu, displays the Generate Files dialog. Here you can set the settings for each of the files you wish to have created by running the Altium Designer installer. It is a good idea to go through the default settings since the user experience, and the change to the default settings, can often be large or small. You have the flexibility to continue fine-tuning the settings of the files after they have been created. However, if you need to create a large number of files and want to have these settings quickly and easily set up - then use the default settings. The Configuration - Preferences menu is an important area of Altium Designer where you have the ability to change a number of settings including: layout, component, company, layout tools, and the user interface. Simply use the pulldown field to select a parameter that you would like to change.
