If there's one change that I'll miss about working in Lightroom, it's the control-Z icon. On the EOS 500, I'm fooled time and time again by the frozen image preview (the little icon in the top-right corner of the thumbnail) when I'm about to commit the image to a shoot's library. I'd never use it, but as a confused newbie, I didn't realize that in LR 4 the image would actually be frozen at the time of the shooting. The new Iveco-series lenses now feature SD card slots and the LV-Series adaptors also feature SD card slots. The object of the video is to show you how great the EOS 500 can be when it comes to shooting difficult scenes, such as fireworks in the evening or the sun during the day. After all, what is even better than the best lens on the best camera? Showing you how I achieve this is important. I would like to mention, however, that while shooting this way, I mostly use the LV-Series adaptors and the EOS 500. With the LV-35 it's not possible to shoot without it. If I select the EF-S 15-85, the 15-100 and the EF-S 18-200 IS, I can attain an excellent shutter speed or aperture by simply activating the LV-Series adaptor. I was able to achieve a shutter speed of 1/400 second and an aperture of f/2.8 with ISO 500. If I had tested it with these medium-format lenses ie EF 24-120 f/4L IS (I did not yet have the very fast fisheye which has to be attached with the EF 100mm lens) alone, I would achieve an EFS-1/400sec shutter speed with an aperture of f/2.8. But, I think it would have been a bit much for such a lens, which at f/2.8 is already out of focus for such a close-up. So it's not that I already did something that we could not do with the regular lenses also. The true advantage is that with the EF-S 15-85 you can shoot at f/2.8. I'm sure that when the EF 35mm f/1.8 lies there, the EFS-1/400sec ULTRA shutter speed will be no problem with this lens either. But I shot the video for you with the other three lenses. At f/2.8, they are close to the EFS-1/400sec at f/2.8, but we no longer see the very finest details and we no longer manage to freeze the movement in the water cascades. That's due to the more shallow depth of field with the faster lenses. The loss in sharpness is negligible, however, especially for a close up such as this. The difference is more the fact that with the EF-S 15-85 you get the effects from the other three lenses for free. Most objects, especially in the foreground and background, still have a small, crisp outline, even when you shoot at f/2.8 with the faster lenses. That's why I would recommend to buy the LV-Series adaptor if you're looking for the best quality at your film camera. However, if you have a walk around lens like the EF-S 24-120 f/4L IS, you can do the same thing with this lens also.
